

5 Reasons to Hire an Executive Coach

By Steven J. Chen, Ph.D.

Are you a business owner who wants to improve your business leadership skills? Do you need someone to help you improve your team dynamics? Do you need motivation for reaching your professional or personal goals? If you answered, “yes” to any of the above questions, an executive coach may be perfect for you. An executive coach is an expert at motivating business owners, managers, and top executives to be action and results-oriented. They can help you deal with leadership issues and provide you with professional tips on how to improve your business from the ground up. Amazingly, they do this from behind the scenes. As such, they don’t mess around with your business product – just the backroom processes and internal leadership skills. For instance, a qualified coach can help you use specific processes to help improve supervisory and interpersonal communication skills, aid those who are experiencing career transitions, and more.

Interestingly, paying for the services of an executive coach is becoming more of a norm in the past 2 years. As a matter of fact, 44% of U.S. companies are planning to increase spending on leadership training and mentoring. This is because using an executive coach is 3 times better than leadership seminars, training camps, or learning from your boss.

- An executive coach can help you develop a workable action plan. Many executive coaches utilize self-assessment tools. With these tools, they can evaluate your individual strengths and weaknesses. They can also help you pinpoint specific business objectives while helping you understand and handle any roadblocks to success. Once you understand where you are, you can figure out where you need to be.
- An executive coach helps you identify your blind spots. A good executive coach can evaluate your existing business processes and provide you with feedback on how to improve. For example, if your dynamics are off balance, a coach can work and encourage you to change your outlook and overall results.

- An executive coach trains you to perform at a higher level. Executive coaches understand the importance of leadership. They realize that a team is only as strong as its weakest link. By focusing on the leader, they can help the entire team. They can prepare managers and top executives to accept bigger roles and challenges. For instance, an executive coach can teach you how to leverage the talents of those who work for and with you.
- An executive coach inspires you to think outside the box: A good executive coach will continuously encourage you to promote your skills so that you can think and act differently. This changes the overall work environment and can facilitate a radical change in your business.
- An executive coach inspires and gives you tools to grow as a leader: The truth is as a leader, manager, or business owner you will be faced with criticism, problems, and challenges. You can choose to ignore them or confront them. An experienced business coach gives you the confidence and tools to do more than just confront them. They give you ideas, strategies, and the drive to lead.

In conclusion, as a leader, it is important that you develop an action plan, identify blind spots, perform at a higher level, think outside the box, and close any gaps in your management team.